

The Best Timepieces From LVMH Watch Week 2025

Highlights include a limited-edition stunner from Daniel Roth, a reconfigured TAG Heuer Formula 1 Chronograph and more

BY OREN HARTOV | January 22, 2025 2:37 pm EST

L'Épée 1839 Watch Box

If you're looking for a high-end yet modern clock, chances are you've considered something from L'Épée 1839. Now owned by LVMH, the Swiss brand has been in business for close to two centuries and designs some of the most thought-provoking timepieces in the world. In addition to timekeepers themselves, however, it also makes interesting accessories such as watch boxes and stands. Its new Watch Box is one such creation, but don't let its straightforward designation fool you: Made from transparent acrylic, its housing features a mechanical "lift" — push a button on the housing, and the lid opens as the lift elevates the watch to within easy reach. Close the lid, and the system rewinds itself, ready to receive the watch when you've finished wearing it. Simple yet elegant and eye-catching, it's the perfect accessory for someone looking to house his or her prized horological treasure in style.

Dimensions: 215mm (length) x 150mm (width) x 140mm (height)